The Exmouth Frost Dragon

By Dragonologist [redacted]

The Exmouth Frost Dragon is an extremly rare form of dragon which is only seen when Exmouth is at its coldest.

How to preserve the Exmouth Frost Dragons

Dragonologist have been concerned for many years that Frost Dragons might be mistaken for other species and therefore become hunted. There nests have been discovered, their location is kept secret. To protect these mysterious and beautiful creatures all dragon lovers should make sure that they eat ice and drinks cold water they should be kept in during summer. It would be disastrous if another species of dragon become extinct.

What they are known for

While most dragons are renowned for hoarding treasure, the Frost Dragon shows no interest in gold, silver or any valuable stones. They are only intrested in flying in the sky looking for frozen ice and turning things to ice. Several Frost Dragons have become world champions. These shy and gentle creatures are vegitarian they only eat ice. There breath is cold because they breath ice. Frost dragons present no danger to humans and you can tame some Frost Dragons but they are to big to kept as pets.

Where they are found

The majority of Frost Dragons are found across the town of Exmouth especialy at the top of hills and in the winter air think where they feel safest. They rest at the top of a windy hills. The only fly at night and at the oddest temperature which makes them very hard to be seen.

How it looks like

Frost Dragons are easy to identify as they are the biggest dragon in the British Isles. They are the size of a elephant and there covered in icey, old frost. The adult Frost Dragons is a light blue with bits of white ice over them which enables it to blow ice out of its mouth and stays alive because they cant become hot. However, baby Frost Dragons are born a light purple colour with bits of ice on it. As they get older they start to fade in colour and turn a light blue.
