

Tuesday 26th January

L.O. I can write an opening using relative clauses

Let's look at the way Chris Riddell opens Goth Girl...

- * What does he include?
- * What does it do for you as the reader?

Tuesday 26th January

L.O. I can write an opening using relative clauses

Success Criteria

What should we include in a success criteria for our story opening? 2 mins

Success Criteria

Tuesday 26th January

L.O. I can write an opening using relative clauses

Success Criteria

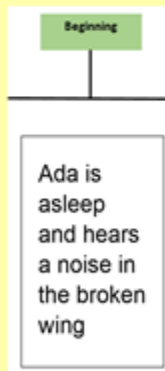

Success Criteria
Introduce the setting (Ghastly-Gorm)
Introduce the characters
Use adjectives (up-leveled)
Use relative clauses
Correct spellings

Recap

What is a relative clause?

An example ...

Use your beginning from your plan yesterday

Crash!

Ada was rudely awoken from a deep sleep by noises in the distance. She gradually eased herself out of her grand eight-poster bed and slipped on her black slippers. She edged over to the ten foot high windows and drew back the red velvet curtains. Ada, who was still half asleep, glared across towards the Broken Wing. The most dilapidated part of the house was illuminated by the crescent moon. Something wasn't right!

Tuesday 26th January

L.O. I can write an opening using relative clauses

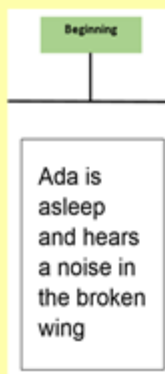

Task

- * Using your beginning from yesterday, write the opening to your chapter.
- * Use the success criteria to guide you - make sure you have included all of them.
- * When you have finished, have a reread of it and edit and improve any elements.

Success Criteria
Introduce the setting (Ghastly-Gorm)
Introduce the characters
Use adjectives (up-leveled)
Use relative clauses
Correct spellings

An example to help you

Crash!

Ada was rudely awoken from a deep sleep by noises in the distance. She gradually eased herself out of her grand eight-poster bed and slipped on her black slippers. She edged over to the ten foot high windows and drew back the red velvet curtains. Ada, who was still half asleep, glared across towards the Broken Wing. The most dilapidated part of the house was illuminated by the crescent moon. Something wasn't right!