Ada gave a little curtsy and went down to dinner.

The dining room of Ghistly-Gorm Hall was in the east wing. It had tall windows with fine views over the dear-deer park along one side.
Along the other wall was an indoor viaduct, which led from a Corinthian serving hatch by the door to the long dining-room table in the centre of the room and back again.

A model railway track led out of the serving hatch, along the viaduct and around the table. The track came from the kitchens of Ghistly-Gorm Hall, and a small steam engine called the Gravy Rocket* ran along it.
On special occasions this was used to carry Mrs Beat'em's dishes up to the guests, who could help themselves to whatever caught their fancy as the steam engine chugged slowly past. After completing a circuit of
